

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, SUNDAY, JANUARY 28, 1906

Many Strange Things in Japan : By William Jennings Bryan

WATCHING A RELIGIOUS PROCESSION

Every nation has its customs, its way of doing things, and a nation's customs and ways are likely to be peculiar in proportion as the nation is isolated. In Japan, therefore, one would expect to see many strange things, and the expectation is more than realized. In some things their customs are exactly the opposite of ours. In writing they place their characters in vertical lines and move from right to left, while our letters are arranged on horizontal lines and read from left to right. Their books begin where ours end, and end where ours begin. The Japanese carpenters pull the saw and plane toward them, while ours push them from them. The Japanese mounts his steed from the right, while the American mounts from the left; Japanese turn to the left, Americans to the right. Japanese write it Smith John Mr., while we say Mr. John Smith. At dinners in Japan wine is served hot and soup cold, and the yard is generally at the back of the house instead of the front.

The Japanese wear white for mourning, and often bury their dead in a sitting posture. The death is sometimes announced as occurring at the house when it actually occurred elsewhere, and the date of the death is fixed to suit the convenience of the family. This is partly due to the fact that the Japanese like to have the death appear as occurring at home. Sometimes funeral services are held over a part of the body. An American lady whose Japanese maid died while attending her mistress in the United States, reports an incident worth relating. The lady called her husband, asking instructions in regard to the disposition of the body. He conferred with the family of the deceased and called back directing the wife to bring a lock of her hair and the false teeth of the departed. The instructions were followed, and upon the delivery of these precious relics they were interred with the usual ceremonies.

The handshake is uncommon even among Japanese politicians, except in their intercourse with foreigners. When Baron Komura returned from the peace conference in which he played so important a part I was anxious to be present at his arrival, partly out of respect to the man and partly out of curiosity to see whether the threatened manifestations of disapproval would be made by the populace, it having been rumored that thousands of death lanterns were being prepared for a hostile parade. (It is needless to say that the threats did not materialize and that no expressions of disapproval were heard after his arrival.) I found it impossible to learn either the hour or the landing place, and, despairing of being present, started to visit a furniture factory to inspect some wood carving. Consul General Jones, of Dalney (near Port Arthur), then visiting in Yokohama, was my escort, and, as good fortune would have it, we passed near the Detached Palace. Dr. Jones, hearing that the landing might be made there, obtained permission for us to await the peace commissioner's coming. We found there Marquis Ito and a half-dozen other officials. As Baron Komura did not arrive for half an hour, it gave me the best opportunity that I could have had to become acquainted with the marquis, who is the most influential man in Japan at present. He is president of the privy council of elder statesmen and is credited with being the most potent factor in the shaping of Japan's demands at Portsmouth.

When Baron Komura stepped from the launch upon the soil of his native land, he was met by Marquis Ito and each greeted the other with a low bow. The baron then saluted the other officials in the same manner and, turning, bowed to a group of Japanese ladies representing the Woman's Patriotic association. Dr. Jones and I stood some feet in the rear of the officials and were greeted by the baron after he had saluted his own countrymen. He extended his hand to us. The incident is mentioned as illustrating the difference in the manner of greeting. For who would be more apt to clasp hands, if that were customary, than these two distinguished statesmen, whose personalities are indissolubly linked together in the conclusion of a world-renowned treaty?

A brief account of the reception of Admiral Togo may be interesting to those who read this article. While at Tokyo I visited the city hall, at the invitation of the mayor and city council.

While there Mayor Ozaki informed me that he, in company with the mayors of the other cities, would tender Admiral Togo a reception on the following Tuesday, and invited me to be present. Of course I accepted, because it afforded a rare opportunity to observe Japanese customs as well as to see a large concourse of people. As I witnessed the naval review in Yokohama the day before and the illumination at night, I did not reach Tokyo until the morning of the reception, and this led me into considerable embarrassment. On the train I met a Japanese gentleman who could speak English. He was kind enough to find me a "rikisha" with a pusher and to instruct them to take me at once to Ueno park. He then left me and the "rikisha" man followed his instructions to the letter. They had not proceeded far when I discovered that Admiral Togo had arrived on the same train and that a long procession had formed to conduct him to the park. Before I knew it, I was whisked past an escort of distinguished citizens, who, clad in Prince Alberts and silk hats, followed the carriages, and then I found my "rikisha" drawn into an open space between two carriages. Grabbing the "rikisha" man in front of me, I told him by word and gesture to get out of the line of the procession. He could not understand English, and I evidently thinking that I wanted to get nearer the front, he ran past a few carriages and then dropped into another opening. Again I got him out of the line, employing more emphasis than before, only to be carried still nearer to the front. After repeated changes of position, all the time employing such sign language as I could command and attempting to convey by different tones of voice suggestions that I could not translate into language, I at last reached the head of the procession. I saw a million people; they represented every class, age and condition. I saw more people than I ever saw before in a single day. Old men and old women, feeble, but strengthened by their enthusiasm; middle-aged men and women, some of whom had shared in the dangers and in the triumphs of the navy; students from the girls' schools, with flags and banners; little children dressed in all the colors of the rainbow; the Japanese cheerers as they called each one of them, old enough to think, was wondering why a foreigner was intruding upon a street which the police had cleared for a triumphal procession. If someone had snarled caught my "rikisha" man and thrust them through the crowd to a side street I should not have complained—I would even have felt relieved; but no one molested them or me, and I reached the park some minutes ahead of the admiral. How glad I was to alight, and how willingly I rewarded the smiles of the "rikisha" men with a bonus—for had they not done their duty as they understood it? And had they not also given me, in spite of my protests, such a view of the people of Tokyo as I could have obtained in no other way?

At the park I luckily fell in with some of the councilmen whom I had met before, and they took me in hand. I saw the procession arrive, heard the heralds (the Japanese cheerers) as they rolled along the street, keeping pace with Togo's carriage, and I witnessed the earnest yet always orderly rejoicing of the crowd that had congregated at the end of the route. When the procession passed by us into the park the members of the city council fell in behind the carriages, and I with them. When we reached the stand, a seat was tendered me on the front row, from which the extraordinary ceremonies attending the reception could be witnessed. Mayor Ozaki, the presiding officer, escorted Admiral Togo to a raised platform, and there the two took seats on little camp stools some ten feet apart, facing each other, with their sides to the audience and to those on the stand. After a moment's delay a priest clad in his official robes approached with cake and a teacup on a tray, and kneeling, placed them before the admiral. Tea was then brought in a long-handled pot and poured into the cup. After the distinguished guest had partaken of these refreshments, the mayor arose and read an address of welcome. As he has the reputation of being one of the best orators of the empire, his part was doubly interesting to me. As he confined himself to his manuscript, I could not judge of his delivery, but his voice was pleasant and his manner natural. The address recited the exploits of Admiral Togo and gave expression to the gratitude of the people. At its conclusion the hero admiral arose and modestly acknowledged the compliment paid to him and to his officers. Admiral Togo is short, even for the Japanese, and has a scanty beard. Neither in stature nor in countenance does he give evidence of the stern courage and indomitable will which have raised him to the pinnacle of fame.

When he sat down the mayor proposed three times three banzais, and they were given with a will by the enormous crowd that stood in the open park before the stand. While writing this article I am in receipt of information that Mayor Ozaki has secured for me one of the little camp stools above referred to and has had made for me a duplicate of the other. They will not only be interesting souvenirs of an historic occasion and prized as such, but they will be interesting also because they contrast so sharply with the large and richly upholstered chairs used in America on similar occasions.

From this public meeting the admiral and his officers were conducted to a neighboring hall, where an elaborate luncheon was served. With the councilmen I went to this hall and was presented to the admiral and his associates, one of whom had been a student at Annapolis. By the courtesy of Hon. Lloyd Biscoe, the American minister, I had an audience with the emperor, these audiences being arranged through the minister representing the country from which the caller comes. Our minister, to whom I am indebted for much assistance and many kindnesses during my stay at the capital, accompanied me to the palace and instructed me, as they say in the fraternities, "in the secret work of the order." Except where the caller wears a uniform, he is expected to appear in evening dress, although the hour fixed is in the daytime. At the outer door stand men in livery, one of whom conducts the callers through long halls, beautifully decorated on ceilings and walls, to a spacious reception room, where a halt is made until the summons comes from the emperor's room. The emperor referred to and has had made for me a duplicate of the other. They will not only be interesting souvenirs of an historic occasion and prized as such, but they will be interesting also because they contrast so sharply with the large and richly upholstered chairs used in America on similar occasions.

From this public meeting the admiral and his officers were conducted to a neighboring hall, where an elaborate luncheon was served. With the councilmen I went to this hall and was presented to the admiral and his associates, one of whom had been a student at Annapolis. By the courtesy of Hon. Lloyd Biscoe, the American minister, I had an audience with the emperor, these audiences being arranged through the minister representing the country from which the caller comes. Our minister, to whom I am indebted for much assistance and many kindnesses during my stay at the capital, accompanied me to the palace and instructed me, as they say in the fraternities, "in the secret work of the order." Except where the caller wears a uniform, he is expected to appear in evening dress, although the hour fixed is in the daytime. At the outer door stand men in livery, one of whom conducts the callers through long halls, beautifully decorated on ceilings and walls, to a spacious reception room, where a halt is made until the summons comes from the emperor's room. The emperor referred to and has had made for me a duplicate of the other. They will not only be interesting souvenirs of an historic occasion and prized as such, but they will be interesting also because they contrast so sharply with the large and richly upholstered chairs used in America on similar occasions.

From this public meeting the admiral and his officers were conducted to a neighboring hall, where an elaborate luncheon was served. With the councilmen I went to this hall and was presented to the admiral and his associates, one of whom had been a student at Annapolis. By the courtesy of Hon. Lloyd Biscoe, the American minister, I had an audience with the emperor, these audiences being arranged through the minister representing the country from which the caller comes. Our minister, to whom I am indebted for much assistance and many kindnesses during my stay at the capital, accompanied me to the palace and instructed me, as they say in the fraternities, "in the secret work of the order." Except where the caller wears a uniform, he is expected to appear in evening dress, although the hour fixed is in the daytime. At the outer door stand men in livery, one of whom conducts the callers through long halls, beautifully decorated on ceilings and walls, to a spacious reception room, where a halt is made until the summons comes from the emperor's room. The emperor referred to and has had made for me a duplicate of the other. They will not only be interesting souvenirs of an historic occasion and prized as such, but they will be interesting also because they contrast so sharply with the large and richly upholstered chairs used in America on similar occasions.

From this public meeting the admiral and his officers were conducted to a neighboring hall, where an elaborate luncheon was served. With the councilmen I went to this hall and was presented to the admiral and his associates, one of whom had been a student at Annapolis. By the courtesy of Hon. Lloyd Biscoe, the American minister, I had an audience with the emperor, these audiences being arranged through the minister representing the country from which the caller comes. Our minister, to whom I am indebted for much assistance and many kindnesses during my stay at the capital, accompanied me to the palace and instructed me, as they say in the fraternities, "in the secret work of the order." Except where the caller wears a uniform, he is expected to appear in evening dress, although the hour fixed is in the daytime. At the outer door stand men in livery, one of whom conducts the callers through long halls, beautifully decorated on ceilings and walls, to a spacious reception room, where a halt is made until the summons comes from the emperor's room. The emperor referred to and has had made for me a duplicate of the other. They will not only be interesting souvenirs of an historic occasion and prized as such, but they will be interesting also because they contrast so sharply with the large and richly upholstered chairs used in America on similar occasions.

From this public meeting the admiral and his officers were conducted to a neighboring hall, where an elaborate luncheon was served. With the councilmen I went to this hall and was presented to the admiral and his associates, one of whom had been a student at Annapolis. By the courtesy of Hon. Lloyd Biscoe, the American minister, I had an audience with the emperor, these audiences being arranged through the minister representing the country from which the caller comes. Our minister, to whom I am indebted for much assistance and many kindnesses during my stay at the capital, accompanied me to the palace and instructed me, as they say in the fraternities, "in the secret work of the order." Except where the caller wears a uniform, he is expected to appear in evening dress, although the hour fixed is in the daytime. At the outer door stand men in livery, one of whom conducts the callers through long halls, beautifully decorated on ceilings and walls, to a spacious reception room, where a halt is made until the summons comes from the emperor's room. The emperor referred to and has had made for me a duplicate of the other. They will not only be interesting souvenirs of an historic occasion and prized as such, but they will be interesting also because they contrast so sharply with the large and richly upholstered chairs used in America on similar occasions.

From this public meeting the admiral and his officers were conducted to a neighboring hall, where an elaborate luncheon was served. With the councilmen I went to this hall and was presented to the admiral and his associates, one of whom had been a student at Annapolis. By the courtesy of Hon. Lloyd Biscoe, the American minister, I had an audience with the emperor, these audiences being arranged through the minister representing the country from which the caller comes. Our minister, to whom I am indebted for much assistance and many kindnesses during my stay at the capital, accompanied me to the palace and instructed me, as they say in the fraternities, "in the secret work of the order." Except where the caller wears a uniform, he is expected to appear in evening dress, although the hour fixed is in the daytime. At the outer door stand men in livery, one of whom conducts the callers through long halls, beautifully decorated on ceilings and walls, to a spacious reception room, where a halt is made until the summons comes from the emperor's room. The emperor referred to and has had made for me a duplicate of the other. They will not only be interesting souvenirs of an historic occasion and prized as such, but they will be interesting also because they contrast so sharply with the large and richly upholstered chairs used in America on similar occasions.

From this public meeting the admiral and his officers were conducted to a neighboring hall, where an elaborate luncheon was served. With the councilmen I went to this hall and was presented to the admiral and his associates, one of whom had been a student at Annapolis. By the courtesy of Hon. Lloyd Biscoe, the American minister, I had an audience with the emperor, these audiences being arranged through the minister representing the country from which the caller comes. Our minister, to whom I am indebted for much assistance and many kindnesses during my stay at the capital, accompanied me to the palace and instructed me, as they say in the fraternities, "in the secret work of the order." Except where the caller wears a uniform, he is expected to appear in evening dress, although the hour fixed is in the daytime. At the outer door stand men in livery, one of whom conducts the callers through long halls, beautifully decorated on ceilings and walls, to a spacious reception room, where a halt is made until the summons comes from the emperor's room. The emperor referred to and has had made for me a duplicate of the other. They will not only be interesting souvenirs of an historic occasion and prized as such, but they will be interesting also because they contrast so sharply with the large and richly upholstered chairs used in America on similar occasions.

From this public meeting the admiral and his officers were conducted to a neighboring hall, where an elaborate luncheon was served. With the councilmen I went to this hall and was presented to the admiral and his associates, one of whom had been a student at Annapolis. By the courtesy of Hon. Lloyd Biscoe, the American minister, I had an audience with the emperor, these audiences being arranged through the minister representing the country from which the caller comes. Our minister, to whom I am indebted for much assistance and many kindnesses during my stay at the capital, accompanied me to the palace and instructed me, as they say in the fraternities, "in the secret work of the order." Except where the caller wears a uniform, he is expected to appear in evening dress, although the hour fixed is in the daytime. At the outer door stand men in livery, one of whom conducts the callers through long halls, beautifully decorated on ceilings and walls, to a spacious reception room, where a halt is made until the summons comes from the emperor's room. The emperor referred to and has had made for me a duplicate of the other. They will not only be interesting souvenirs of an historic occasion and prized as such, but they will be interesting also because they contrast so sharply with the large and richly upholstered chairs used in America on similar occasions.

From this public meeting the admiral and his officers were conducted to a neighboring hall, where an elaborate luncheon was served. With the councilmen I went to this hall and was presented to the admiral and his associates, one of whom had been a student at Annapolis. By the courtesy of Hon. Lloyd Biscoe, the American minister, I had an audience with the emperor, these audiences being arranged through the minister representing the country from which the caller comes. Our minister, to whom I am indebted for much assistance and many kindnesses during my stay at the capital, accompanied me to the palace and instructed me, as they say in the fraternities, "in the secret work of the order." Except where the caller wears a uniform, he is expected to appear in evening dress, although the hour fixed is in the daytime. At the outer door stand men in livery, one of whom conducts the callers through long halls, beautifully decorated on ceilings and walls, to a spacious reception room, where a halt is made until the summons comes from the emperor's room. The emperor referred to and has had made for me a duplicate of the other. They will not only be interesting souvenirs of an historic occasion and prized as such, but they will be interesting also because they contrast so sharply with the large and richly upholstered chairs used in America on similar occasions.

From this public meeting the admiral and his officers were conducted to a neighboring hall, where an elaborate luncheon was served. With the councilmen I went to this hall and was presented to the admiral and his associates, one of whom had been a student at Annapolis. By the courtesy of Hon. Lloyd Biscoe, the American minister, I had an audience with the emperor, these audiences being arranged through the minister representing the country from which the caller comes. Our minister, to whom I am indebted for much assistance and many kindnesses during my stay at the capital, accompanied me to the palace and instructed me, as they say in the fraternities, "in the secret work of the order." Except where the caller wears a uniform, he is expected to appear in evening dress, although the hour fixed is in the daytime. At the outer door stand men in livery, one of whom conducts the callers through long halls, beautifully decorated on ceilings and walls, to a spacious reception room, where a halt is made until the summons comes from the emperor's room. The emperor jo in tone, and sometimes singing. At the Maple Club the geisha girls displayed American and Japanese flags. We saw the dancing again at an elaborate dinner given by Mr. Fukuzawa, editor of the Fiji Shimpo. Here also the flags of both nations were used. In what words can I adequately describe the hospitality of the Japanese? I have read, and even heard, that among the more ignorant classes there is a decided anti-foreign feeling, and it is not unnatural that those who refuse to reconcile themselves to Japan's new attitude should blame the foreigners for the change, but we did not encounter this sentiment anywhere. Never in our own country have we been the recipients of more constancy kindness or more considerate attention. From Marquis Ito down through all the ranks of official life we found everyone friendly to America, and to us as representatives of America. At the dinner given by Minister Griescom there were present, besides Marquis Ito, the leader of the liberal party, Count Okuma, the leader of the progressive party (the opposition party) and a number of other prominent Japanese politicians.

FEMININE SOCIABILITY IN JAPAN

At the dinner given by Consul-General Miller at Yokohama, Governor Sufu and Mayor Ichihara were present. The state and city officials wherever we have been have done everything possible to make our stay pleasant. The college and school authorities have opened their institutions to us and many without official position have in unmistakable ways shown themselves friendly. We will carry away with us a number of handsome presents bestowed by municipalities, colleges, societies and individuals.

We were entertained by Count Okuma soon after our arrival and met there, among others, Mr. Kato of the state department and President Hayatama of the Waseda university and of the count's house is half European and half Japanese, and his garden is celebrated for its beauty. At Viscount Kano's we saw a delightful bit of home life. He is one of the few daimios, or feudal lords, who has been conspicuous in the politics of Japan, and we soon discovered the secret of his success. He has devoted himself to the interests of agriculture and spent his time in an earnest and intelligent effort to improve the condition of the rural population. He is known as "The Farmer's Friend." His house is at the top of a beautifully terraced hill, which was once a part of his feudal estate. He and his wife and six children met us at the bottom of the hill on our arrival and escorted us to the bottom on our departure. The children assisted in serving the dinner and afterward sang for us the American national air as well as their own national hymn. Their hospitality was so genuine and so heartily entered into by all the family that we could hardly realize that we were in a foreign land and entertained by hosts to whom we had to speak through an interpreter.

In the country, fifteen miles from Yokohama, I was a guest at the home of Mr. Yamashita, the father of the young man who, when a student in America, made his home with us for more than five years. Mr. Yamashita was of the samurai class and since the abolition of feudalism has been engaged in farming. He had invited his relatives and also the postmaster and the principal of the district school to the noon meal. He could not have been more thoughtful of my comfort or more kindly in his manner. The little country school which stood near by turned out to bid us welcome. The children were massed at a bridge over which large flags of the two nations floated from bamboo poles. Each child also held a flag, the Japanese and American flags alternating. As young Yamashita and I rode between the lines they waved their flags and shouted, "Banzai!" And so it was at the other schools. Older people may be diplomatic and feign good will, but children speak from their hearts. There is no mistaking their meaning, and in my memory the echo of the voices of the children mingling with the assurances of the men and women convinces me that Japan entertains nothing but good will toward our nation. Steam has narrowed the Pacific and made us neighbors. Let justice keep us friends.

W. J. BRYAN.

(Copyright, 1906, by J. B. Bowles. Copy-right in Great Britain. All Rights Reserved.)

School Girls and False Values

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

I hope you won't be frightened or fancy that it isn't of importance to school girls when I ask you to talk with me about a sense of proportion. Very few of us have just that right idea of the real value of things that makes us keep our lives well balanced. Most of us run to extremes. For instance, there is Annie who feels that nothing is so useful as to be always tidy and well dressed; from her head to her feet Annie is so trim and shining that it is a positive delight to look at her. She boasts that she never wears the same white shirt waist two days in succession, that her frocks and her petticoats are always fresh from the laundry, and that she never has so much as a hair ribbon out of place.

I hold rather rigid views about neatness myself, and I think it inexcusable in a girl to have boots run down at the heels and lacking buttons, or to wear gloves that should be mended; but when I remember that Annie's mother keeps only one maid, and that her father is a clerk on a small salary, and that there are four other children in the family, I am driven to the conclusion that the number of shirt waists in the wash every week convicts Annie of extreme selfishness. She purchases her immaculate appearance at too great a cost, since she is far too busy with high school work to do her own washing and ironing. When a girl exhibits one good quality at the expense of others, and gratifies her taste through the self-denial of a hard-worked mother, she shows very plainly that she has no sense of proportion. I could tell you of women, not school girls, who, having failed to secure a true feeling for harmony when they were young, have made life a burden for everybody belonging to them ever since they grew up. They have made a fetish of system, having determined to have breakfast at a fixed hour, they have been wretched themselves and made everybody else so; if a single person in the family came down a few minutes after the clock had struck 7 or 8, as the case might be, their household would be done on certain days, at any cost. There was no freedom or elasticity in their regime; they lacked a sense of proportion. System is an excellent servant, but when it is made a master it becomes the worst of tyrants. I want you to do your work according to method, but occasionally put the method aside if the interruption will tend to the general well-being of the day.

In one of Dickens' novels he introduces us to a character whose name is Mrs. Jellyby. This lady is very charitable and spends her time in doing good works. She writes innumerable letters and sends them to the ends of the earth. She carries on societies that make flannel skirts for children in Africa and send leaflets in an unknown tongue to people who cannot read. Of course, there is extravagance in this description, and yet there are women of the Jellyby type in the world. Their missionary effort is not practical, nor sensible. They intrude into homes where they are not wanted, and ask impertinent questions of the poor, and bestow alms where almsgiving is superfluous. Very likely all the time they are neglecting home duties. "Do ye next thing," is a good motto for most of us. The Jellyby children were falling downstairs and crying for bread, their father and their eldest sister were at their wits' end, while Mrs. Jellyby remained absorbed in her several schemes of benevolence.

She was a person who had no sense of proportion. Helen, who used to be my neighbor, so worshipped truth-telling that it was difficult to carry on an ordinary conversation if she were in the company. She utterly refused to be accurate or definite about anything lest by chance she should say what was not literally true. You could never bring her to a positive statement. She always hedged with "I think," "I fancy," or "It is my impression." And more times than I can tell you she came back after a call to find that Helen had not been home, and that she had been too highly colored. Having no imagination herself, she could not make allowances for it in her friends. The worst of the matter was that Helen's truth-telling laid a burden on herself alone, but on the rest of us. If anyone related an incident in her hearing and varied the telling in some trifling detail, Helen was on the alert to set the narrator right and rectify the mistake. It was maddening to have her rush in when you mentioned that you had gone to town on Friday at noon, with the correction. It was 11 o'clock, Annie dear, not 12, when you took the train." We must tell the truth, girls, according to the highest standards of ethics, and we must never deliberately stain our souls with falsehood. But a martinet like Helen not takes the husk for the kernel and is likely to be persona non grata in society to the end of her days.

Equally unfortunate is Marcella, who was so resolved on saying nothing unkind about anybody that she at times preserves a silence which can be easily misunderstood, and which is much more hurtful to her neighbors than an occasional criticism would be. Our temperaments are diverse. Some of us are impulsive, emotional and impetuous. Some of us speak before we think; some of us have looked so long at one good thing in life and conduct that we can see nothing else. Good manners and decorum, savoir faire and the graceful carriage that comes from mingling with high-bred people are very charming. Yet it is possible to set too high a value on these and to overlook real worth in some one who is shy and awkward and who has not had the advantage of much social training. Robert Burns has the true ring in his famous lyric familiar to every reader of the English language. "The rank is but the guinea's stamp, The man's the gold for a' that."

We need a sense of proportion in our friendships. I think I ought to put the emphasis of this talk just here, for nothing is more harmful to girls than exclusive friendship, in which two of them are so absorbed in each other that they have no room for another thought in the world. I have seen Amy so devoted to Phyllis that she was wretched when Phyllis went away to school, actually pining and being ill as if she could take no more interest in life. This kind of friendship acts very badly on all concerned. The girl who clings as the vine clings to the tree is a parasite. She chokes out the wholesome life of the one to whom she clings, and she gets no good herself.

Whatever you do, dear girls, I beg of you to avoid friendships that use up your vitality, make you negligent of duty and prevent you from making the best of life as you go on. A girl may have for a favorite teacher a sort of adoration that is morbid and foolish, or she may in secret cherish a sort of devotion to somebody she hardly knows, living a dream life that undrains her for either work or play. In friendship, dear girl, cultivate a sense of proportion.

(Copyright, 1906, by Joseph B. Bowles.)